Draft Taxation Rulings (DTRs) represent the preliminary, though considered, views of the Australian Taxation Office.

DTRs may not be relied on by taxation officers, taxpayers and practitioners. It is only final Taxation Rulings which represent authoritative statements by the Australian Taxation Office of its stance on the particular matters covered in the Ruling.

What this Ruling is about

1. This Ruling deals with the circumstances where work-related clothing, uniform and footwear expenses, including associated maintenance costs, are allowable as deductions under subsection 51(1) of the Income Tax Assessment Act 1936 (the Act).

2. It also discusses any fringe benefits tax liability on employers under the Fringe Benefits Tax Assessment Act 1986 (FBTAA) for providing support to employees in connection with clothing, uniform and footwear.

Class of person/arrangement

3. This Ruling applies to individuals who are employees or in receipt of Prescribed Payments, and to employers who provide benefits to employees in connection with clothing, uniform and footwear.

Date of effect

4. This Ruling applies to years commencing both before and after its date of issue. However, the Ruling does not apply to taxpayers to the extent that it conflicts with the terms of a settlement of a dispute agreed to before the date of issue of the Ruling (see paragraphs 21 and 22 of Taxation Ruling TR 92/20).

Previous Rulings

5. Taxation Rulings IT 300, IT 2096, and Taxation Determinations TD 92/157, TD 93/101, TD 93/109, TD 93/121, and TD 93/154 will be withdrawn on finalisation of this Ruling.

Ruling

6. In order to be deductible, expenditure on clothing, uniforms and footwear must satisfy the deductibility tests contained in subsection 51(1) and not be excluded from deductibility by section 51AL or section 51AH of the Act. The expenditure will only be deductible where there is a sufficient connection between the clothing and the activities productive of assessable income such that its essential character is work-related and not private or domestic in nature. While this will depend on all the facts, this Ruling provides broad principles which will help in determining this question in any given case.

7. Costs of buying, renting, laundering, dry cleaning, repairing and replacing clothing are private in nature except where the expense is directly attributable to the income earning activities of the taxpayer.

Deductibility of work-related expenses

8. In short, a deduction is allowable if an expense:

(a) is incurred;

(b) meets the deductibility tests;

(c) satisfies the substantiation rules which apply to employees; and

(d) is not excluded from deductibility under section 51AH or section 51AL (see paragraph 37).

(a) Expense must be incurred

9. The expense must be incurred by the taxpayer to be deductible.

(b) Expense must meet deductibility tests

10. Expenditure will be deductible under subsection 51(1) where there is a sufficient connection between the expense and the income earning activities, such that its essential character is work-related and not private or domestic in nature.

11. A deduction will not be allowable if the expense is:

(a) capital in nature (e.g., initial purchase of judges' ceremonial robes);

(b) private or domestic in nature; or

(c) incurred in earning tax exempt income (e.g., on uniform maintenance related to membership of the Army Reserve).

12. Generally, the costs of living, such as the purchase of conventional clothing, food, drink and shelter will be private or domestic in nature and therefore not deductible.

13. If an expense is incurred partly for work purposes and partly for private purposes, then only the work-related portion is an allowable deduction.

14. The mere fact that an employee incurs expenses at the direction of his or her employer does not mean that a deduction is necessarily allowable. Also, a deduction is not allowable by the mere fact that the taxpayer will not be able to engage in the activity from which his or her income is derived unless the expenditure is incurred.

Clothing allowance

15. The receipt of an allowance does not automatically mean that the expenditure is deductible. However, allowances received for clothing, uniform/wardrobe and related expenditure are fully assessable under subsection 25(1) or paragraph 26(e) of the Act: Mansfield v. FC of T 96 ATC 4001 at 4006; (1996) 31 ATR 367 at 372 (Mansfield's case).

Reimbursements

16. Under section 51AH, where all or part of the expenditure is reimbursed, the whole or part of the amount reimbursed is not an allowable deduction. However, a reimbursement of an expense is not included in the taxpayer's assessable income but constitutes a fringe benefit according to paragraph 20(b) of the FBTAA (see paragraphs 42 to 44).

(c) Expense satisfies the substantiation rules

17. The income tax law requires substantiation of certain work-related expenses, including clothing.

18. A deduction is not allowable if the substantiation requirements are not met, although this is subject to the Commissioner's discretion in special circumstances (Schedule 2B of the Act).

Conventional clothing

19. Expenditure on conventional clothing will often not be an allowable deduction under subsection 51(1). This is because there is not usually a sufficient connection between expenditure on clothing and the income earning activities of the taxpayer.

20. Whether such a connection exists, and the essential character of the expense, are matters to be determined by reference to all the circumstances of the particular case.

21. The mere fact that a taxpayer's employer requires or expects the taxpayer to wear a particular type or style of conventional clothing does not make the cost of that clothing deductible: see FC of T v. Cooper (1991) 29 FCR 177 at 185, 201-202; 91 ATC 4396 at 4402; (1991) 21 ATR 1616 at 1623, 1637-1638 (Cooper's case) and Mansfield's case 96 ATC 4001 at 4008; (1996) 31 ATR 367 at 374.

22. Similarly, the mere fact that a taxpayer correctly perceives that it is of critical importance to his/her success in his/her occupation or profession to wear a particular type or style of conventional clothing does not make the cost of that clothing deductible: see, for example, Case 16/93 93 ATC 208 at 214; AAT Case 8658 (1993) 25 ATR 1115 at 1121-1122.

23. However, there may be cases where there exists a connection between the expenditure on the clothes and the income producing activities of the taxpayer. FC of T v. Edwards (1994) 49 FCR 318; 94 ATC 4255, (1994) 28 ATR 87 (Edwards' case) provides an example. In that case, as well as the circumstances outlined in paragraphs 21 and 22 above, there were other factors present, such as the need for additional clothing and for frequent changes of clothing while performing her duties.

24. Further information about conventional clothing is contained in the Explanations section at paragraphs 51 to 65.

Occupation specific clothing

25. A deduction is allowable for the cost of occupation specific clothing under subsection 51(1) because the distinctive characteristics of the clothing provide the nexus between the expenditure and the work activity. An example is a chef's traditional uniform consisting of a chef's hat, chef's chequered pants and a chef's white jacket.

26. Further information about occupation specific clothing is contained in the Explanations section at paragraphs 66 to 69.

Protective clothing and footwear

27. Protective clothing is clothing worn while working which protects persons from:

(a) injury (e.g., steel capped safety boots for building workers);

(b) death (e.g., lead aprons worn by x-ray machine operators);

(c) disease (e.g., protective gloves used by dentists); or

(d) damage to other clothing, worn by that person, in circumstances where such damage would otherwise be a normal incident of the taxpayer's income earning activities (e.g., overalls for coal miners or mechanics).

28. A deduction is allowable for the cost of protective clothing under subsection 51(1) because there is a sufficient connection between the expenditure and the income earning activities.

29. Further information about protective clothing and footwear is contained in the Explanations section at paragraphs 70 to 78.

Compulsory uniform/wardrobe

30. A deduction is allowable for the cost of a compulsory and distinctive uniform/wardrobe under subsection 51(1).

31. The essential character of an employee's expenditure on clothing items including shoes, socks, stockings and accessories which form an integral part of a compulsory and distinctive uniform/wardrobe is expenditure directly related to the income producing activities of the employee. It is this distinctive characteristic which provides the nexus between the expenditure on the uniform and the work activity.

32. A compulsory uniform/wardrobe must be prescribed by the employer in an expressed policy which makes it a requirement for a particular class of employees to wear that uniform while at work, and which identifies the relevant employer. The employer's compulsory uniform/wardrobe policy guidelines should stipulate the characteristics of the colour, style and type of the clothing and accessories that qualify them as being a distinctive part of the compulsory uniform/wardrobe. The wearing of the uniform/wardrobe must also be strictly and consistently enforced.

33. In our view, it is only in these strict regimes for compulsory and distinctive uniforms/wardrobes that expenditure on these items is likely to be regarded as work-related rather than private in nature.

34. Further information about compulsory uniform/wardrobe is contained in the Explanations section at paragraphs 79 to 86.

Single items of compulsory clothing

35. Where employees are required, as a strict condition of their employment, to wear at work single items of compulsory and distinctive clothing, a deduction will be allowable for the costs of this item of clothing under subsection 51(1). Further information about single items of compulsory clothing is contained in the Explanations section at paragraph 87 and 88.

Non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe

36. Expenditure in relation to a non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe as defined in section 51AL will only be deductible under subsection 51(1) if it satisfies the requirements of section 51AL.

37. Section 51AL provides that expenditure on a non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe will be allowable under subsection 51(1) only if the design of the clothing has been entered on the Register of Approved Occupational Clothing (the Register).

38. In summary, the characteristics of a non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe under Section 51AL are:

(a) the wearer has to be an employee, or recipient of a Prescribed Payment;

(b) the uniform has to identify the wearer distinctively as associated with the employer;

(c) it is not compulsory to wear the uniform/wardrobe, or, if compulsory, the wearing of the uniform is not consistently enforced; and

(d) the uniform/wardrobe design has been entered on the Register.

39. The definition of non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe in subsection 51AL(4) refers to a set of one or more items of clothing. Expenditure on single items of non-compulsory clothing, which come within the definition of non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe in that subsection, but which are not registered, will not be deductible under subsection 51(1). Where items of clothing cannot be included on the Register on the basis that they do not come within that definition, the deductibility of expenditure on those items will depend on the tests contained in subsection 51(1).

40. Further information about non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe is contained in the Explanations section at paragraphs 89 to 93.

Depreciation of articles of clothing

41. Where the initial outlay on long-lasting clothing is substantial (e.g., judges' ceremonial robes) such outlays are, on balance, considered to be a capital expense that can be depreciated in terms of section 54 of the Act (see the Explanations section at paragraphs 99 and 100).

Fringe benefits tax

42. The provision of financial or property support by an employer to enable employees to acquire clothing, accessories and footwear will give rise to a fringe benefit under the FBTAA.

43. However, the 'otherwise deductible rule' in either sections 24 or 44 of the FBTAA would operate to reduce the taxable value of a fringe benefit by the notional amount of any tax deduction that would have been available to the employee in respect of the particular item acquired.

44. Any financial or property support provided by the employer for deductible items will not attract fringe benefits tax. The taxable value of the benefit in this case will be nil because of the 'otherwise deductible rule'. However, where expenditure on clothing is not deductible, the taxable value of the fringe benefit will correspond to the value of support provided by the employer.

Explanations

45. The tests for deductibility of work-related expenses are contained in subsection 51(1) as follows:

> 'All losses and outgoings to the extent to which they are incurred in gaining or producing the assessable income, or are necessarily incurred in carrying on a business for the purpose of gaining or producing such income, shall be allowable deductions except to the extent to which they are losses or outgoings of capital, or of a capital, private or domestic nature, or are incurred in relation to the gaining or production of exempt income.'

46. A number of court decisions have determined that, for an expense to satisfy the tests in subsection 51(1):

(a) it must have the essential character of an outgoing incurred in gaining assessable income or, in other words, of an income-producing expense (Lunney v. FC of T; Hayley v. FC of T (1958) 100 CLR 478; (1958) ALR 225, (1958) 11 ATD 404);

(b) there must be a nexus between the outgoing and the assessable income so that the outgoing is incidental and relevant to the gaining of assessable income (Ronpibon Tin NL v. FC of T (1949) 78 CLR 47; (1949) 8 ATD 431);

(c) it is necessary to determine the connection between the particular outgoing and the operations or activities by which the taxpayer most directly gains or produces his or her assessable income (Charles Moore & Co (WA) Pty Ltd v. FC of T (1956) 95 CLR 344; (1958) 11 ATD 147; (1956) 6 AITR 379; Cooper's case; Roads and Traffic Authority of New South Wales v. FC of T (1993) 43 FCR 223; 93 ATC 4508; (1993) 26 ATR 76; FC of T v. Hatchett (1971) 125 CLR 494; 71 ATC 4184; (1971) 2 ATR 557); and

(d) its essential character must not be of a capital, private or domestic nature (per Lockhart J in Cooper's case 91 ATC 4396 at 4400; (1991) FCR 177 at 181-182; (1991) 21 ATR 1616 at 1620; and Mansfield's case).

47. It is not sufficient that the expenditure is a prerequisite to the derivation of assessable income. The expenditure must be relevant and incidental to the actual activities which gain assessable income.

48. The fact that the expense is incurred at the employer's direction does not convert the essential character of that expenditure from a private to a work-related expense. In Cooper's case, Hill J said (91 ATC 4396 at 4414; (1991) FCR 177 at 200; (1991) 21 ATR 1616 at 1636) that:

> '...the fact that the employee is required, as a term of his employment, to incur a particular expenditure does not convert expenditure that is not incurred in the course of the income-producing operations into a deductible outgoing.'

49. Similarly, in Mansfield's case, Hill J said (96 ATC 4001 at 4008; (1996) 31 ATR 367 at 375) that:

> 'The mere fact that a particular form of clothing is required to be used in an occupation or profession will not necessarily lead to > the conclusion that expenditure on that form of clothing was deductible.

> It can be said that generally expenditure on ordinary articles of apparel will not be deductible, notwithstanding that such expenditure is necessary to ensure a suitable appearance in a particular job or profession. An employed solicitor may be required to dress in an appropriate way by his or her employer, but that fact alone would not bring about the result that the expenditure was deductible.'

50. Also, it is not sufficient that the taxpayer will not be able to engage in the activity from which his income is derived unless the expenditure is incurred: Cooper's case 91 ATC 4396 per Lockhart J at 4402 and Hill J at 4415; (1991) FCR 177 at 184 and 201; (1991) 21 ATR 1616 at 1622 and 1637.

Conventional clothing

51. For expenditure on clothing generally, the decision of the Full Federal Court in Edwards' case contains the following cautionary statement (49 FCR 318 at 323; 94 ATC 4255 at 4259; (1994) 28 ATR 87 at 91):

> 'It should be noted that the decision does not establish that the cost of all clothing acquired and worn at work will, because of that circumstance alone, become deductible as an outgoing incurred in deriving assessable income.'

52. Generally, expenditure on conventional clothing will not be deductible. However, this is not a universal proposition and in special circumstances there may be a sufficient connection between the income earning activities and expenditure on conventional clothing (see Edwards' case).

53. In Case T47 18 TBRD 242; 14 CTBR (NS) Case 56, J F McCaffrey (Member) stated the rationale why conventional clothing is usually private in nature (18 TBRD 242 at 243; 14 CTBR (NS) Case 56 at 307):

> 'In order to live normally in our society, it is requisite that individual members thereof be clothed, whether or not they go out to work. In general, expenditure thereon is properly characterised as a personal or living expense...'

See also Case R55 84 ATC 411 at 416; Case U80 87 ATC 470 at 472 where a shop assistant was denied a deduction for the cost of black clothes; and Case 16/93 93 ATC 208 where a fashion editor was denied a deduction for clothes, dry cleaning and grooming expenses.

54. While Tribunal decisions prior to Edwards' and Mansfield's cases must now be read in the light of these decisions, they are illustrative of the factors that are relevant to the question whether a sufficient connection exists between the expenditure on clothing and the income earning activities such that the essential character of the expense is work-related rather than private in nature. For example, the Tribunal in Case U95 87 ATC 575 at 580 said:

> 'There is no one test which will satisfy all facts, but clearly on the decided cases, relevant considerations include:
> (1) Express or implied requirements of the employer or business concerning clothing;
> (2) The extent to which the clothing is distinctive or unique to the nature of the employment or business;
> (3) The extent to which the clothing is used solely for work;
> (4) The extent to which the clothing is unsuitable for any activity other than work;
> and no doubt other factors may become relevant depending on the particular facts or circumstances of a given case.'

55. Some of the tests formulated by the Boards of Review include the 'abnormal expenditure' test (see Case A45 69 ATC 270; 15 CTBR (NS) Case 24); the 'necessary and peculiar test' (see Case H61 8 TBRD 287; 7 CTBR (NS) Case 54; Case G81 75 ATC 572; 7 CTBR (NS) Case 54; Case H2 76 ATC 7; 20 CTBR (NS) Case 56); or the 'abnormal wear and tear' test (see Case T47 18 TBRD 242; 14 CTBR Case 56; Case G81 75 ATC 572; 7 CTBR (NS) Case 54; Case H33 76 ATC 285; 20 CTBR (NS) Case 87; Case M28 80 ATC 187; 24 CTBR (NS) Case 3). However, as has been pointed out by the courts on many occasions, in the end one must always return to the words of section 51.

56. According to the Full Federal Court in Edwards' case 94 ATC 4255 at 4259; (1994) 49 FCR 318 at 323; (1994) 28 ATR 87 at 91:

> 'The decision [of the AAT in Case 31/93 93 ATC 359; AAT Case 8858 (1993) 26 ATR 1181, and Gummow J in FC of T v. Edwards 93 ATC 5162; (1993) 27 ATR 293] turns on its own special facts.' (citations added).

57. These facts included the following circumstances:

(a) the taxpayer gained her income by attending the Governor's wife as her personal secretary;

(b) the extensive wardrobe of high quality clothes was necessary to perform properly her activities;

(c) she was expected to dress in a manner compatible with the Governor's wife and in an appropriate way for each occasion;

(d) she changed her clothing, sometimes two or three times a day, in the course of performing her income-producing activities;

(e) the quantity and quality clothing was in excess of her normal every day requirements; and

(f) she only infrequently used the wardrobe for private purposes.

58. It was found that together the factors set out above established a sufficient connection between the expenditure on additional clothing and the activities by which the taxpayer earned her income. The essential character of the expenditure was held to be the gaining or producing of assessable income.

59. Edwards' case is important in emphasising that the proper construction of subsection 51(1) does not result in a universal proposition that expenditure on additional clothing of a conventional kind worn in a conventional way can, by itself, never attract deductibility under the Act: see Full Federal Court 94 ATC 4255 at 4259; (1994) 49 FCR 318 at 323; (1994) 28 ATR 87 at 91. However, the facts in Edwards' case were special, and it is likely that there will be few situations that are analogous to Ms Edwards' circumstances. For example, in Case 48/94 94 ATC 422; AAT Case 9679 (1994) 29 ATR 1077, the taxpayer, a self-employed professional presenter and speaker, submitted that her circumstances were comparable to those of Ms Edwards. The taxpayer gave evidence that she maintained a separate wardrobe to meet her work requirements and that she used this wardrobe exclusively in relation to her work. Sometimes, a client would request that she should dress in a specific manner when performing a presentation. Her image was of vital importance in both securing and performing her duties, and her clothes were an aspect of her image.

60. Senior Member Barbour, in disallowing the deduction for the cost of the clothing, said (94 ATC 422 at 427; (1994) 29 ATR 1077 at 1083) that:

> 'While the A list clothes [those used exclusively for work] assisted in creating an image compatible with the applicant's perceptions of her clients' and audiences' expectations, her activities productive of income did not turn upon her wearing A list clothes, however important the applicant may have perceived these clothes to be in her presentation activities. There is not the requisite nexus between her income earning activities and the A list clothing expenses.'

61. He went on to say (94 ATC 422 at 427-428; (1994) 29 ATR 1077 at 1083-1084) that:

'...the expense is not a business expense is also indicated by the very conventionality of the clothing. The applicant did not buy specific clothes for specific presentations (as an entertainer might) or have clothes that were specific and suited only for her employment or business (as a nurse might). The applicant chose to wear her A list clothes for business only, but this does not then enable the expense in purchasing those clothes to be treated as a business expense. Nor did she wear several changes of clothes while performing her duties, such that this expense for additional clothing was purely for the purpose of gaining or producing income, and hence properly regarded as a business expense, despite its conventionality (as in Edwards).'

62. Example: As part of her work as an undercover police officer, Jill is required to play a 'role' which requires the wearing of clothing that she would not otherwise wear and which is necessary and peculiar to her 'role'. Jill wears other clothing to and from work and does not wear the clothing used in her 'role' for private purposes. Jill's expenditure on clothing worn in her undercover activities, which are additional to her normal needs, has a direct connection with her income-producing activities as a police officer.

63. Example: Beata is a marriage celebrant who claims expenditure on dress suits, accessories, cleaning, shoes and stockings. She contends that the wardrobe of hats and garments, including shoes and stockings, ranging from the highly formal to the informal, is far more extensive than she would ordinarily acquire. Even if the additional clothing is worn solely for the purpose of performing her duties as a marriage celebrant, the facts would be analogous to Case 48/94 94 ATC 422; AAT Case 9679 (1994) 29 ATR 1077, where the expenditure was held to be private in nature. In particular, her activities productive of income do not turn upon her wearing the additional clothes, nor are the clothes specific and suited only to her income earning activities. Despite having an extensive wardrobe, Beata's duties do not involve multiple daily changes of clothing and the expenditure remains purely private in nature: see Case V68 88 ATC 508, but compare Case V143 88 ATC 899; AAT Case 4608 (1988) 19 ATR 3872. Similarly, the expenditure incurred on shoes and stockings is private in nature and is not deductible.

64. Example: Warren is a sports teacher. He claims deductions for the cost of purchasing track suits, T-shirts, shorts and socks. These are conventional clothes which do not form part of a uniform, do not protect Warren and are not distinctive of Warren's particular occupation or employer. Expenditure on clothing of this type is generally private in nature.

65. Example: Jim is a public servant. He wears trousers and a shirt to work, and keeps a suit handy in case he is needed to advise the Minister at Parliament House. A deduction is not allowable for the cost of his suit because the expenditure is private in nature: see Case A45 69 ATC 270; 15 CTBR (NS) Case 24; Mallalieu v. Drummond [1983] 2 AC 861 (the solicitor's black clothes case); Case U80 87 ATC 470; and Case K2 78 ATC 13; 22 CTBR (NS) Case 21.

Occupation specific clothing

66. Occupation specific clothing distinctively identifies the wearer as a person associated with a particular profession, trade, vocation, occupation or calling. It is this distinctive nature of the clothing that provides the nexus between the expenditure and the income earning activities such that the essential character of the expense is work-related and not of a private nature.

67. Examples of clothing that are considered by this Office to be occupation specific are a cleric's ceremonial robes, a barrister's robes, a chef's chequered trousers and a nurse's uniform (i.e., traditionally consisting of a cap, cardigan, white dress with short sleeves, action back, zip front, front pockets, front pleat and special non-slip nursing shoes).

68. Nevertheless, clothing which could be worn in a number of occupations is not occupation specific clothing. For example, a white coat worn with white trousers may designate a health worker but does not differentiate, for example, between a pharmacist or a laboratory technician. However, the cost of these items may be an allowable deduction under subsection 51(1) if they are protective (see paragraphs 27 and 28).

69. Example: Norm is a chef who wears a chef's traditional uniform, i.e., chef's hat, chef's chequered pants and a chef's white jacket. A deduction is allowable under subsection 51(1) for the cost of the uniform because the clothing is considered peculiar, incidental and relevant to the gaining of assessable income from his specific occupation as a chef.

Protective clothing and footwear

70. The cost of an item of clothing will be deductible where the wearing of such an item is necessary to protect the taxpayer from above average risk of physical injury in carrying out the requirements of his/her occupation or is necessary to enable the taxpayer physically to perform such requirements. The level of danger required was described in Case A45 69 ATC 270 at 271; 15 CTBR (NS) C*ase 24* at 162 (Case A45) as:

> '...a continuing, high level of danger, such as arises in the particular process in which this taxpayer was involved, and not the mere statistical risk of injury that may be run by employees in general...'

71. The deductibility of expenditure on these items will therefore depend on the circumstances of the taxpayer's income earning activities. For example, a deduction is allowable for expenditure on clothing used exclusively on the job to protect a person from the rigours of harsh or extreme working conditions. Thus, in Case V79 88 ATC 550; AAT Case 4353 (1988) 19 ATR 3504, the cost of a waterproof jacket, woollen jumper and thick socks acquired by an employee for exclusive use in the harsh climate of the Snowy Mountains was found to be deductible. In the circumstances of that case, the clothing was found to have a 'distinct occupational character' and 'was used exclusively for work'.

72. Further, in Case A45, a blast furnace worker was allowed deductions for protective woollen clothing which:

- were a 'practical necessity intended for the protection of the taxpayer's body' in the presence of extreme heat and flying sparks;
- were put on at the place of work and taken off after duty, and not used for private purposes; and
- were entirely unsuitable for private use.

The clothing in this case was found to bear a distinct occupational character such that there was a sufficient nexus between the clothing and his occupation.

73. Similarly, some occupations, such as cleaners, building workers and truck drivers, use high pressure hoses. These individuals may wear heavy duty wet weather gear to protect themselves and their clothing. Other occupations may require special clothing to protect the employee when using chemicals. Having regard to the income earning activities, a deduction would be allowed in these circumstances to the extent to which the clothing is worn for work purposes.

74. Overalls to protect the person from grease and dirt have been held to be deductible: Case R80 16 TBRD 388; 12 CTBR (NS) Case 107. Also, protective boots and overalls worn solely and exclusively for work purposes, white coats for doctors and boiler suits for boilermakers have been described as sufficiently peculiar to take them out of the normal character of conventional clothing: Case T103 86 ATC 1182.

75. However, expenditure on heavy duty conventional clothing such as jeans, drill shirts, trousers and socks, will not usually have a sufficient connection with the income earning activities. The essential character of such expenditure would be private in nature, and not deductible. Although heavy duty conventional clothing may be worn to help prevent injury at work, this does not change its character from being conventional in nature (see Case T103 86 ATC 1182).

76. Thus, except where the wearing of the clothing is a practical necessity if the taxpayer is to be able to carry out his or her duties without personal danger, a deduction is not generally allowable for items that provide protection from the natural environment (e.g., sunhats): see, for example, Case Q11 83 ATC 41; (1983) 26 CTBR (NS) Case 75.

Protective footwear

77. A deduction may be allowable under subsection 51(1) for footwear which is necessary to protect the wearer from the hazards and conditions likely to be encountered in his/her occupation (e.g., special non-slip shoes for a nurse, steel capped boots for a bricklayer, or rubber boots for a concreter). This will only be the case where there is a direct nexus between the income producing activities and the expenditure.

78. The distinction to be made here is between someone who must wear the footwear so as to be able to perform his or her duties without serious risk of injury (e.g., the nature of the duties of a high impact aerobics instructor may necessitate the purchase of special gym shoes) and someone who merely wears those shoes because they find them comfortable, convenient or appropriate.

Compulsory uniform/wardrobe

79. Expenditure on a compulsory and distinctive uniform/wardrobe is deductible because the necessary connection exists between the expenditure and the occupation such that the essential character of the expense is work-related and unique. In order to constitute a compulsory uniform/wardrobe it is not enough that there is a requirement to wear clothing of a particular colour or style at work. The uniform/wardrobe needs to be sufficiently distinctive so that the casual observer can clearly identify the employee as working for the particular employer.

80. A uniform/wardrobe is a collection of inter-related items of clothing and accessories that is distinctive to a particular employing organisation. In Case R55 84 ATC 411; 27 CTBR (NS) Case 109, the Tribunal said (84 ATC 411 at 416; 27 CTBR (NS) Case 109 at 874) that:

> '...conventional clothing of a particular colour or style does not necessarily, because of those factors alone, assume the character of a uniform. Likewise, ordinary clothing is not converted into a uniform by the simple process of asserting that it fills that role or by the wearing of a name plate, etc. attached to clothing.'

81. In Mansfield's case, Hill J stated (96 ATC 4001 at 4008; (1996) 31 ATR 367 at 375) that:

> 'A uniform is not merely a set of clothes reserved for the occasion of work. Rather it is the fact that the uniform has a distinctive characteristic which provides the nexus between the expenditure on the uniform and the work activity...'

82. His Honour noted that the mere fact that a particular expenditure or a particular form of clothing may be required by the employer, is not determinative of its deductibility, nor is the existence of an award or allowance, nor that the expenditure is a prerequisite to the derivation of assessable income. It must be relevant and incidental to the actual activities which gain the assessable income.

83. In order to be compulsory, the wearing of the uniform must be strictly and consistently enforced. It is only in these circumstances that the uniform is relevant and incidental to the actual activities which gain the assessable income.

84. A uniform will only include shoes, socks, stockings and accessories where the employer's express uniform/wardrobe guidelines stipulate the characteristics which qualify them as an integral part of the compulsory uniform, e.g., colour, style, type. As an integral part of a compulsory uniform such items can be differentiated from ordinary clothing.

85. In Case U95 87 ATC 575 at 580 , the Tribunal held that a deduction for clothing, including shoes and stockings, claimed by a shop assistant was disallowed because there was:

> '...nothing distinctive or unique about the combination of clothing which would identify the wearer as a [name of employer] shop assistant or even a shop assistant from another department store. The colour combination of the clothing would be included in the range of acceptable street dress unassociated with business or employment, as well as a combination of colours sometimes worn by female drink or food waiting staff.'

86. In Mansfield's case, a flight attendant was allowed a deduction for stockings and shoes which were required to be worn as part of a compulsory and distinctive uniform/wardrobe, the wearing of which was strictly enforced by the airline.

Single items of compulsory clothing

87. In situations where employees are under a strict requirement to wear single items of compulsory and distinctive clothing, expenditure incurred on that clothing may be an allowable deduction under subsection 51(1) where:

(a) the employer stipulates the nature of the clothing;

(b) the clothing is distinctive or unique to the nature of the employment or business and identifies the wearer with a particular organisation or body of persons. Generally, the clothing is distinctive or unique where the clothing has a clearly visible logo or emblem of the employing organisation permanently affixed and that clothing is not available to the general public;

(c) the employer strictly enforces the compulsory nature of the item; and

(d) the compulsory clothing is used solely for work (otherwise the claim may need to be apportioned between private use and work use).

Additionally, the expenditure on the clothing may be allowable where:

(e) the compulsory item of clothing is occupation specific rather than employer specific and the compulsory clothing is generally unsuitable for private use; or

(f) the clothing is protective in nature such that there is a sufficient nexus between the clothing expense and the income earning activities.

88. Example: Ronald is a service station attendant who wears on duty a green monogrammed woollen jumper supplied by his employer. His other clothing worn at work is conventional clothing. It is compulsory for him to wear the jumper at work. The employer enforces the express compulsory clothing policy by regular checks. The jumper is not available for use by, or for sale to, the public. Ronald can claim a deduction for his costs of laundering and maintaining the jumper.

Non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe

89. Non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe is defined in subsection 51AL(4) as a set of one or more items of clothing (other than occupation specific clothing and protective clothing), where:

(a) the items of clothing, when considered as a set, distinctively identify the wearer as a person associated, directly or indirectly, with the employer; and

(b) either:

(i) the employer does not have an express policy to the effect that, the wearing of the set of clothes is compulsory; or except in special circumstances; or

(ii) the employer has such a policy but does not consistently enforce it.

90. A deduction is not allowable for a non-compulsory uniform/wardrobe expense incurred after 31 August 1993 by an employee or a recipient of Prescribed Payments, except where the clothing designs have been entered on the Register of Approved Occupational Clothing (subsection 51AL (2)) and the tests in subsection 51(1) are met.

91. Only those costs incurred after the date of registration can be claimed as an allowable deduction.

92. An application for entry of a clothing design on the Register must be made by an employer to the Department of Industry, Science and Tourism (DIST). Clothing which may be registered includes accessories such as belts, ties, scarves and hats. Underwear, short socks, stockings or shoes cannot be registered.

93. The Secretary of DIST will not approve a clothing design unless it meets the criteria set out in its guidelines. These guidelines are available from DIST to interested persons without charge.

Laundry and maintenance

94. In Case U95 87 ATC 575 the Tribunal commented at 579:

> 'The purchase and wearing of clothing as well as its cleaning and maintenance is therefore a necessary and personal expense which would normally be classified as being an expense of a private and domestic nature.
> There are occasions, however, when because of the relationship between expenditure on clothing and the gaining and producing of income, the private and domestic character of that expenditure is converted instead to an employment or business character.'

95. It is noted that Gummow J in FC of T v. Edwards 93 ATC 5162 at 5169; (1993) 27 ATR 293 at 301, questioned whether the essential character of the dry cleaning costs in that case was sufficiently relevant to the revenue earning activity of the taxpayer. Nevertheless, on balance, it is considered that generally a deduction is allowable for the cost of cleaning and maintaining clothing and footwear provided the clothing is used for income producing purposes and the laundry, dry cleaning or maintenance expense is occasioned by the performance of those duties: see Case R80 16 TBRD at 390-391; 12 CTBR (NS) Case 107 cited in Case V79 88 ATC at 553-554.

Substantiation requirements

96. To be an allowable deduction, the expenditure on clothing must also satisfy the substantiation provisions of Division 2 of Schedule 2B of the Act.

97. To claim a deduction, an employee must have documentary evidence of the work expense (including clothing, laundry and cleaning) where the total work expenses exceed $300.

98. An exception relates to laundry expenses where a maximum of $150 may be claimed without substantiation, provided it is incurred, even where work expenses total more than $300. The Commissioner accepts that a reasonable estimate of laundry costs may be used provided the claim for laundry costs does not exceed $150.

Capital exclusion

99. Generally, the initial purchase cost of clothing is not a capital expense. This is because the benefit of the expenditure will usually not endure beyond several years.

100. An exception to this general rule could be found, for example, with the costs of judges' robes or barristers' silk robes (Case 625 (1946) 14 SAfTC 528). In such a case, the initial purchase cost of the robe itself is significant and the average life of the robe has been estimated at between five and ten years. Accordingly, it can be depreciated under section 54 of the Act.

Alternative views

101. It has been suggested that the cost of all clothing acquired and worn at work is deductible. However, it is clear from the Full Federal Court in Edwards' case 94 ATC 4255 at 4259; (1994) 49 FCR 318 at 322; (1994) 28 ATR 87 at 90, that this circumstance alone is not sufficient.

102. Similarly, it has been suggested that the cost of purchasing stockings, socks and shoes used solely at work is deductible to taxpayers generally. However, in Mansfield's case Hill J noted that the shoes were worn as part of the uniform, and that they were too large for ordinary use and subject to regular scuffing. As for the stockings, Hill J took the view, not without some doubt, that the connection with employment was to be found in the fact that the pantyhose were part of a compulsory and distinctive uniform that was strictly enforced. It was this feature that differentiated the hosiery from ordinary clothing.

103. The view has been expressed that expenditure incurred on additional conventional clothing worn at work is an allowable deduction. Reliance is placed on Board of Review and Tribunal decisions that refer to 'the abnormal expenditure on conventional clothing' test, e.g., Case A45, and on the reference to additional expenditure in Edwards' case. However, it is clear that 'such a test cannot replace either a statutory expression or judicially expressed statements of principle in relation to such an expression': Case V79 88 ATC 550 at 552; (1988) 19 ATR 3504 at 3507. Even in FC of T v. Edwards 93 ATC 5162 at 5168; (1993) 27 ATR 293 at 299, Gummow J observed:

> 'Thus in the present case, in its reasons the AAT referred to the application in the past by it of two "tests" as a guide for determining whether expenditure on clothing is allowable under sub-s. 51(1). The first was the "necessary and peculiar" test (e.g. uniforms required by the employer) and the second the "abnormal expenditure on conventional clothing" test (e.g. the wardrobe of a mannequin). However, as the AAT went on to point out, these "tests" have fallen into disfavour before it and the position which now applies is that such "secondary" criteria tend only to obscure the application of s. 51. That, of course, throws one back to the search, among other things, for the "essential character" of the outgoing.'

104. In Edwards' case, the Court pointed to the significance of the fact that the amount claimed for expenditure was for 'additional clothing', over and above the taxpayer's personal requirements of modesty, decency and warmth. Weight was also given to the fact that there were additional changes of clothes in the working day over and above the first set of clothes, and that the clothing was qualitatively different from that which she wore in ordinary life. The Full Federal Court noted in 94 ATC 4255 at 4259; (1994) 49 FCR 318 at 323; (1994) 28 ATR 87 at 91: 'the decision turns on its own special facts'. As Hill J pointed out in Mansfield's case, Edwards' case is at one end of the deductibility spectrum of what might be deductible in contrast with the distinctive and compulsory uniforms which are at the other end.

105. No doubt the additional nature of the clothing will be a relevant factor to be taken into account. However, as was explained by Hill J in Mansfield's case in 96 ATC 4001 at 4007; (1996) 31 ATR 367 at 374, to seize upon the reference to 'additional clothing' in Edwards' case is to elevate a proposition of fact to a proposition of law.

106. As is illustrated in Case 48/94 94 ATC 422; AAT Case 9679 (1994) 29 ATR 1077, the 'additional clothing' factor will not be sufficient where the income earning activities do not turn upon the wearing of the additional clothes and where they are not specific and suited only for the income earning activity.

107. In this Ruling, a view is sometimes taken that a particular expense is not likely to be regarded as deductible because it is not sufficiently connected to the income earning activities such that its essential character is private in nature. However, as noted by Wilcox J in Cooper's case in 91 ATC 4396 at 4404-4405; (1991) 29 FCR 177 at 187-188; (1991) 21 ATR 1616 at 1625-1626:

> 'Everything depends upon the ambit of the facts selected for inclusion in the description of essential character ...
> ... The whole of the relevant circumstances must be looked at in order to determine whether the expenditure was incurred in gaining assessable income.'

This cautionary note is relevant when considering the examples contained in this Ruling.
